Nobody Expects the Spanish Inquisition ... or Biotech Entrepreneurship as Expecting the Unexpected

Biotech ventures and companies focused on the development of therapeutics, face risks and unique challenges that stem from the enormous capital needs, stringent regulatory hurdles and lengthy timelines they face; additionally, the economy is volatile. To succeed and possibly even thrive in this environment, it is important to expect the unexpected. Effective leadership, proactive strategy and enabling transactions are critical elements in successfully navigating these challenges. This presentation will provide some examples of planning for and tackling the unexpected.
